CONCRETE GRAVE FOR MRS. EDDY

Known in thirty-five tons of concrete and steel, forming a tomb invisible to anything but a convulsion of nature is the most modern crypt, the latest center containing the body of Mrs. Eddy. It is in the final resting place in Mt. Auburn cemetery. In a few days the guards who have watched the corpse while it lay in the receiving tomb, will be withdrawn and when the weather permits an imposing monument to be built over the grave will be the only reminder of the last resting place of the founder of the Christian Science sect.

Extensive preparations for the funeral had been made by the directors of the Christian Science Church, but to avoid a crowd on public notice was given of the burial. The only relative of Mrs. Eddy present at the funeral of the last was General Henry M. Eddy of Concord, N. H., a second cousin of Mrs. Eddy and executor of her estate.

The excavation for the grave on the shore of Hallow Lake, and far from the town of Cambridge, Mass., was made by the Cambridge Iron Works. The grave was ten feet deep and four feet wide. The concrete was poured in a mold made of interlocking steel bars and concrete, the whole set in the earth by upright steel bars, the result of a bronze box containing the written words of Mrs. Eddy.

After the witnesses to the final interment of Mrs. Eddy had left the cemetery and the concrete was poured, the grave was closed and the concrete was poured.

MRS. VAN NORDEN SEEKS A DIVORCE
BINGO, N. H., Jan. 27.—Mrs. Harriet Stewart Van Norden of New York and North charge, wife of Benjamin L. Van Norden, is one of the latest applicants here for divorce. She has been living in a modest cottage, and she had hoped to escape publicity in the action by filing her complaint under seal. The facts are divulged through the intervention of the court but every possible effort is made for privacy.

MAINE WANTS FRISCO
FOR 1915 EXPOSITION
AUGUSTA, Me., Jan. 27.—The Maine State Convention adopted a resolution in Congress favoring San Francisco for the Panama Exposition in 1915. Another resolution, asking for an extraordinary session of Congress for the purpose of repealing the Panama-Adams tariff law, and to revise the tariff laws, was introduced in the House by Representative Farnsworth of Maine, and asking for special consideration. Representative Farnsworth is a Democrat.

STEALS HACK AFTER BEING PUT OFF TRAIN
Recently bent on reaching Salem at any cost, an undisciplined man who was put off a Boston & Maine train at the western division station in Malden, stole a hack and continued on his way as far as Melrose. He was then held up. The man was identified as William H. Brown, a resident of Malden, and he was arrested. He had been successful in getting the hack and its passengers to the police station, where the driver was placed in the padded cell for safe keeping.

CAMBRIDGE SITE GAINS WITH TECH

President Mansfield of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology is understood to favor the offer of land in Cambridge for a site for the Institute.

The Cambridge site would be about in any way. It would make possible a connection between the Institute and the city and would keep the Institute in Cambridge.

"It is settled that we must move from our present location," said President Mansfield today. "The question is, where? The Cambridge site is a difficult one to get, but it is the only one that would be more suitable than the one from Springfield and I could say would be more suitable than the one from Springfield."

One thing might interfere with its being carried through, however. There is already a result of the presence of the Springfield stock market, and it is unlikely that there will be political opposition to establishing Technology there.

The Springfield offer comprises three acres of land on the Connecticut River, between Springfield and Chicago, and on the Cambridge bank of the Charles River, between the Harvard and MIT buildings, practically the same as that used for the new expanding plant.

In protest against proposed legislation an executive committee of the Boston Telephone Association, began work today on plans to make a fight to the limit.

The committee is composed of Charles M. Moore, C. L. Lewis, George W. Moore, B. C. Lane and C. J. Dwyer.

The association was organized in 1904, and has since that time been engaged in a struggle to prevent the telephone from being used as a means of making money. It has succeeded in many instances, but it is now faced with a new and more powerful enemy.

The proposed legislation would allow the telephone companies to raise their rates at will, without any regard for the needs of the public. This is a step which the association believes would be a disaster to the city.

The association has already taken steps to oppose the legislation, and it expects to take further action in the near future.

It Made Him a Better Walker to Observe the Sabbath, and as He Gets Older—He Is Now Seventy-five—He Will Learn That There Is Much in All Religions That Is Practically as Well as Spiritually Beneficial

Weston, the great walker, who crossed this continent on foot in his old age, talked interestingly to a group of young men the other day. He is the same wonderful old Weston who some years ago gave walking lessons in public to young readers of this newspaper.

Mr. Weston in his latest speech told the young men that he had never walked for money ON SUNDAY. Other walkers had made their greatest profit by giving exhibition walks on Sundays. They earned large rewards or large bets by taking long walks, which extended over more than seven days and involved Sunday walking.

But walk for money on Sunday Mr. Weston never would do and never has done. He told his hearers that he had promised his old mother, who is now dead, when she worried about his becoming a professional walker and thought he would turn out a gambler and a drunkard, that he would never walk for pay on the blessed Sabbath day.

Once, he said, when he was in Paris and very hard up, he lost five thousand dollars because he wouldn't walk on Sunday. But in the long run he believes that the vow which he made to his mother was a good thing for him.

It WAS an excellent thing, indeed, and many who observe religious teachings of various kinds impartially from the outside realize that the regulations of religions are as beneficial materially as they are spirit-usually. If Weston had done as other young men of his time did, if he had engaged in long and exhausting contests, agreeing to walk day after day, more than six days in succession, without the necessary rest on the seventh day, he would be dead and forgotten now, instead of being the wonderful old athlete of the century.

If he had used himself up, physically disregarding the great wisdom which is expressed in the commandment to rest one day in seven, he might have been driven to the artificial stimulants which his mother dreaded, and to which so many over-strained and over-tired men have succumbed.

The teachings of the great religions are based upon material wisdom, as well as upon spiritual wisdom. The compulsory rest one day in seven, which is part of many different religions, is absolutely essential to the PHYSICAL health of men and of animals—apart from its importance to their moral and spiritual health.

A man working six days and resting on the seventh day can do more work in the year, and can live and work more years, than he possibly could do if he worked day in and day out without the needed rest. Fortunate it is for the human race that religion has commanded this rest one day in seven, fortunate that religion, overawing the heartless employers of olden times, and coercing through public opinion the equally heartless employers of modern times, has compelled practically all men to rest one day in the week.

The seventh day has meant rest, recuperation, a chance for the nerves, the muscles and the mind to renew their forces; it has meant a chance for humanity. And it has meant, above all, a METHODICAL rest, occurring at regular intervals, not dependent upon accidental, irregular feast days of imaginary gods or idols, as in very ancient times.

And as the religious teaching that commands rest on the seventh day helps human beings, so also, has that teaching, which is part of many religions, commanding the observance of certain fast days, at stated intervals and on special occasions.

Many a man who fasts from a sense of religious duty, as Weston refrained from walking on Sunday out of respect for his mother, fails to realize how much that fast does for him PHYSICALLY. The fact that men refrain from meat at stated intervals—especially when they can have all the meat they need the rest of the time—has saved many thousands and many millions from the rheumatism that comes of uric acid poisoning and of excessive meat eating. Those that have fasted entirely through piety from time to time and that have observed partial fasts regularly, have given their stomachs a chance to rest, their internal organs a chance to recuperate. They have done for the unseen, overworked internal machinery of the body what the rest on the Sabbath does for the body as a whole.

ORG. PLAN. APPROVED BY THE BOARD

Editor AMERICAN:

Much has been said about the stenographer, but little if anything about the vast number of unskilled and uneducated men and women who are the backbone of the Civil War offering the bodies of their sons for $50. This should be a disgrace for any nation. In order to maintain the honor of the nation, it is necessary to make a sacrifice of this nature. A few more and advanced years forced it. "Would you have a nation that would sacrifice the lives of its people to maintain the honor of the nation?" "Would you have a nation that would sacrifice the lives of its people to maintain the honor of the nation?" "Would you have a nation that would sacrifice the lives of its people to maintain the honor of the nation?"

No Mystery Is Too Baffling for Him

BY DOROTHY DI

THE other day a woman said to me: "What can a mother do to offset the influence of her father's example on her son?"

"I am married to a man who is what you know of as a good man and a good citizen. He is upright in his dealings, moral and law abiding, he provides for his family, and is a pattern of respectability. He is domestic and his children are well-behaved and obedient. I feel sure that, in spite of the war that he

"But he is one of the many men who are not at all representative of the whole race of women have no other purpose in the world than to be playthings, their slaves, their children, and they are not lucky in the background when they are used."

Making a Beggar of a Wife

"If you should confront my husband with my opinion of women, he would deny it. He would say that I am a hypocrite, and that he has never received them, but he flames at the mouth at the very idea of giving these respected and noble creatures the same consideration as he accords at a woman's slave, and thinks

"If I express an opinion, with which he disagrees, he makes nothing of telling me that I am a hypocrite, and that I am talking about it. He makes free with my views, and his chief source of wit is in contradicting myself. I have been told that interesting fables out of some of the old legends, through the medium of his pen, make me up to the ridicule of all friends."

"I have got tired of all of this. I have got to the place where it didn't hurt very much, when I suddenly saw that I was not to be heard by the fact that my own people were in the father's footsteps, and in treating me with the same contempt with which

"This world is a world of men, in which man naturally gets the best of everything simply because he is a man. In the long run, only weak and low-down subser-

Following Father's Example

"You would not believe the cruel tale," he says to me, and when I reprove him he retorts, 'Well, papa says that's just like a fool woman,' and I cannot answer him for I cannot poison his mind against his father.

"All the contempt that my husband reeked unceremoniously from toward women has been poured into my ears. Personally, he has nothing against me. I have been a good wife, and a good mother. I have been a good mother-in-law. I kept or more thrifflily managed than the one I run. More than that, I am a good person. I have never been without my clothes and, generally, I do not coast on the taste and good judgment of my husband. I have been a good wife. In a way, he feels the same sort of pride in me as he does in the superior expert in his line. But for me, my husband is not a man. He is a woman."

Scuttlings Every Day

"But I am a woman, therefore, my husband is not a man, and my husband is not a woman, therefore, my husband is not worth considering."

"I can do as I please. I can buy things that no girl, while she religiously acquiesces, can buy. She knows just where every cent has gone."

"If I want a dollar for any special purpose, I have to explain just what I am going to do with it, and what I did with it last time. I have to explain to my mother, it according to her mood; but never without having to stand for a tirade about my extravagance."

"In every way I am made to feel, and, as you can see, I am made to feel, that my little looks on and listens with child's receptive mind, is made to feel, that I have neither the intelligence nor the beauty."

"My son will follow his father's example. He will be the son of his father, his father, for practically every man treats his wife the way he saw his mother treated. It is idle to preach civility, and the place of a woman in the family is the place of a father who bellows his wife."

"It is the example of the father that counts—not the mother's teachings—and the mother's example counts less than my little boy. How can I teach him to be respectful to men when he sees his father treat men with disrespect every day?"

"When his father doesn't honor me?"
